Temperature Solutions

If you are looking for solutions to help open your business and buildings safely, our new thermal body temperature detection systems can help. By setting up a thermal detection area or queue, in which persons must pass in front of a thermal detection system, business owners are able to measure body temperature using thermal imaging technology and get instant alerts if anyone trying to enter that may be running a fever. At that point you can pull them aside for further evaluation or refuse access altogether. Choose the right thermal solution for your business needs. We offer several different thermal body temperature detection solutions that can read single persons or up to 10 people at a time in a designated area. These thermal imaging solutions help you measure temperature at a safe distance and provide instant feedback. Human body temperature detection solutions are new to the fight against Coronavirus and our team is here to help you find the right solution so your customers protect their employees and customers.
